| Description | The most basic Path Traversal attack uses the "../" special-character sequence to alter the response. Most popular web servers will prevent this technique from escaping the web document root, alternate security filters. These method variations include valid and invalid Unicode-encoding ("..%u2216" backslash characters ("..\") on Windows-based servers, URL encoded characters "%2e%2e%2f" backslash character. Even if the web server properly restricts Path Traversal attempts in the URL path, a web application's handling of user-supplied input. This is a common problem of web applications that use template engines. In some variations of the attack, the original URL parameter value is substituted with the file name of one of the files on the server. Consequently, the results can reveal source code because the file is interpreted as text instead of HTML. To employ additional special characters such as the dot (".") to reveal the listing of the current working directory, bypass rudimentary file extension checks. |

| Solution   | Assume all input is malicious. Use an "accept known good" input validation strategy, i.e., use an allow list of known good inputs. Reject any input that does not strictly conform to specifications, or transform it into a known good input. Do not rely on a deny list. However, deny lists can be useful for determining which inputs are so malformed that they should be rejected outright. When performing input validation, consider all potentially relevant properties, including length, type, missing or extra inputs, syntax, consistency across related fields, and conformance to business rules. An input may be syntactically valid because it only contains alphanumeric characters, but it is not valid if it contains a null byte or a newline character. For filenames, use stringent allow lists that limit the character set to be used. If feasible, only allow characters that are safe in all environments, and exclude directory separators such as "/". Use an allow list of allowable file extensions. Warning: if you attempt to cleanse your data, then do so that the end result is not in the form that can be used to bypass the allow list. For example, remove characters such as '.' and ';' which may be required for some exploits. An attacker can transform a valid input into a dangerous form. Suppose the attacker injects a '.' inside a filename (e.g. "sensitiveFile"); the result is a valid filename, "sensitiveFile.". If the input data are now assumed to be safe, then the attacker can bypass the allow list. Inputs should be decoded and canonicalized to the application's current internal representation. If the application does not decode the same input twice. Such errors could be used to bypass allow list schemes that check for duplicates. Use a built-in path canonicalization function (such as realpath() in C) that produces the canonicalized path, removing "." sequences and symbolic links. Run your code using the lowest privileges that are required to accomplish the necessary tasks. Do not use elevated privileges that are only used for a single task. That way, a successful attack will not immediately compromise the entire system. For example, database applications rarely need to run as the database administrator. When the set of acceptable objects, such as filenames or URLs, is limited or known, create a mapping from numeric IDs to the actual filenames or URLs, and reject all other inputs. Run your code in a "jail" or similar sandbox environment that enforces strict boundaries between processes. This effectively restricts which files can be accessed in a particular directory or which commands can be executed. OS-level examples include the Unix chroot jail, AppArmor, and SELinux. In general, managed code environments like the Java SecurityManager allows you to specify restrictions on file operations. This may not be a feasible solution, and it only limits the impact to the operating system; the resource is still compromised. |

| Description | A cross-site request forgery is an attack that involves forcing a victim to send an HTTP request to a target destination without their knowledge or intent in order to perform an action as the victim. The underlying cause is application functionality using predictable URL /form actions in a repeatable way. The nature of the attack is that CSRF exploits the trust that a web site has for a user. By contrast, cross-site scripting (XSS) exploits the trust that a user has for a web site. Like XSS, CSRF attacks are not necessarily cross-site, but they can be. Cross-site request forgery is also known as CSRF, XSRF, one-click attack, session riding, confused deputy, and sea surf. CSRF attacks are effective in a number of situations, including: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>* The victim has an active session on the target site.</li> <li>* The victim is authenticated via HTTP auth on the target site.</li> <li>* The victim is on the same local network as the target site.</li> </ul> CSRF has primarily been used to perform an action against a target site using the victim's privileges, but recent techniques have been discovered to disclose information by gaining access to the response. The risk of information disclosure is dramatically increased when the target site is vulnerable to XSS, because XSS can be used as a platform for CSRF, allowing the attack to operate within the bounds of the same-origin policy. |

| Solution   | Phase: Architecture and Design Use a vetted library or framework that does not allow this weakness to occur or provides constructs that make this weakness easier to avoid. For example, use anti-CSRF packages such as the OWASP CSRFGuard. Phase: Implementation Ensure that your application is free of cross-site scripting issues, because most CSRF defenses can be bypassed using attacker-controlled script. Phase: Architecture and Design Generate a unique nonce for each form, place the nonce into the form, and verify the nonce upon receipt of the form. Be sure that the nonce is not predictable (CWE-330). Note that this can be bypassed using XSS. Identify especially dangerous operations. When the user performs a dangerous operation, send a separate confirmation request to ensure that the user intended to perform that operation. Note that this can be bypassed using XSS. Use the ESAPI Session Management control. This control includes a component for CSRF. Do not use the GET method for any request that triggers a state change. Phase: Implementation |

| Solution   | Review the source code of this page. Implement custom error pages. Consider implementing a mechanism to provide a unique error reference/identifier to the client (browser) while logging the details on the server side and not exposing them to the user. |

| Description | Content Security Policy (CSP) is an added layer of security that helps to detect and mitigate certain types of attacks, including Cross Site Scripting (XSS) and data injection attacks. These attacks are used for everything from data theft to site defacement or distribution of malware. CSP provides a set of standard HTTP headers that allow website owners to declare approved sources of content that browsers should be allowed to load on that page — covered types are JavaScript, CSS, HTML frames, fonts, images and embeddable objects such as Java applets, ActiveX, audio and video files. |

| Other Info    | The CORS misconfiguration on the web server permits cross-domain read requests from arbitrary third party domains, using unauthenticated APIs on this domain. Web browser implementations do not permit arbitrary third parties to read the response from authenticated APIs, however. This reduces the risk somewhat. This misconfiguration could be used by an attacker to access data that is available in an unauthenticated manner, but which uses some other form of security, such as IP address white-listing. |

| Solution      | Ensure that sensitive data is not available in an unauthenticated manner (using IP address white-listing, for instance).Configure the "Access-Control-Allow-Origin" HTTP header to a more restrictive set of domains, or remove all CORS headers entirely, to allow the web browser to enforce the Same Origin Policy (SOP) in a more restrictive manner.                                                                                                                                                      |

| Solution   | Modern Web browsers support the Content-Security-Policy and X-Frame-Options HTTP headers. Ensure one of them is set on all web pages returned by your site/app.If you expect the page to be framed only by pages on your server (e.g. it's part of a FRAMESET) then you'll want to use SAMEORIGIN, otherwise if you never expect the page to be framed, you should use DENY. Alternatively consider implementing Content Security Policy's "frame-ancestors" directive. |

| Solution   | Configure the server to prevent such information leaks. For example: Under Tomcat this is done via the "server" directive and implementation of custom error pages. Under Apache this is done via the "ServerSignature" and "ServerTokens" directives. |

| Description | The web/application server is leaking information via one or more "X-Powered-By" HTTP response headers. Access to such information may facilitate attackers identifying other frameworks/components your web application is reliant upon and the vulnerabilities such components may be subject to. |

| Description | HTTP Strict Transport Security (HSTS) is a web security policy mechanism whereby a web server declares that complying user agents (such as a web browser) are to interact with it using only secure HTTPS connections (i.e. HTTP layered over TLS/SSL). HSTS is an IETF standards track protocol and is specified in RFC 6797. |

| Description | The Anti-MIME-Sniffing header X-Content-Type-Options was not set to 'nosniff'. This allows older versions of Internet Explorer and Chrome to perform MIME-sniffing on the response body, potentially causing the response body to be interpreted and displayed as a content type other than the declared content type. Current (early 2014) and legacy versions of Firefox will use the declared content type (if one is set), rather than performing MIME-sniffing. |

| Solution   | Ensure that the application/web server sets the Content-Type header appropriately, and that it sets the X-Content-Type-Options header to 'nosniff' for all web pages. If possible, ensure that the end user uses a standards-compliant and modern web browser that does not perform MIME-sniffing at all, or that can be directed by the web application /web server to not perform MIME-sniffing. |

| Description   | The cache-control header has not been set properly or is missing, allowing the browser and proxies to cache content. For static assets like css, js, or image files this might be intended, however, the resources should be reviewed to ensure that no sensitive content will be cached. |

| Solution   | For secure content, ensure the cache-control HTTP header is set with "no-cache, no-store, must-revalidate". If an asset should be cached consider setting the directives "public, max-age, immutable".                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |

| Description   | The content was retrieved from a shared cache. If the response data is sensitive, personal or user-specific, this may result in sensitive information being leaked. In some cases, this may even result in a user gaining complete control of the session of another user, depending on the configuration of the caching components in use in their environment. This is primarily an issue where caching servers such as "proxy" caches are configured on the local network. This configuration is typically found in corporate or educational environments, for instance. |

| Solution  | Validate that the response does not contain sensitive, personal or user-specific information. If it does, consider the use of the following HTTP response headers, to limit, or prevent the content being stored and retrieved from the cache by another user: Cache-Control: no-cache, no-store, must-revalidate, private Pragma: no-cache Expires: 0 This configuration directs both HTTP 1.0 and HTTP 1.1 compliant caching servers to not store the response, and to not retrieve the response (without validation) from the cache, in response to a similar request. |

| Solution   | This is an informational alert rather than a vulnerability and so there is nothing to fix.                                                                                          |

| Description   | This check looks at user-supplied input in query string parameters and POST data to identify where Content-Type or meta tag charset declarations might be user-controlled. Such charset declarations should always be declared by the application. If an attacker can control the response charset, they could manipulate the HTML to perform XSS or other attacks. For example, an attacker controlling the &lt;meta&gt; element charset value is able to declare UTF-7 and is also able to include enough user-controlled payload early in the HTML document to have it interpreted as UTF-7. By encoding their payload with UTF-7 the attacker is able to bypass any server-side XSS protections and embed script in the page. |

| Solution      | Force UTF-8 in all charset declarations. If user-input is required to decide a charset declaration, ensure that only an allowed list is used.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
